Net Neutrality Law
Last month Gov. Inslee signed the nation's first state law, effective June 6, 2018, that prevents internet service providers from blocking and slowing down content online. This could be overturned in the courts since FCC claims they have the only authority to oversee broadband internet services and states could not create their own rules. Internet service providers could also sue Washington State to overturn its rules.

LEGISLATIVE NEWS

Initiatives – On April 27 Tim Eyman will be asking Thurston County Superior Court judge Christine Schaller to order the Secretary of State to put both Initiative 940 (which sought to change state law requiring prosecutors prove police officers acted with malice to find guilt in an officer-involved shooting) and the Legislature's alternative on the ballot for voters to decide. This is what is required by the State Constitution. Instead the all Democratic Legislature decided for us. If this becomes the norm we may no longer have recourse by the initiative process. More info in the March 17, 2019 Everett Herald available online or at the Library.
